

Bayer Advanced™ Season Long Grub Control Q&A

When is the best time to apply Bayer Advanced™ Season Long Grub Control?

Bayer Advanced™ Season Long Grub Control can be applied anytime from mid-May through mid-August before grubs hatch. Best results are often seen with applications beginning early in the summer or mid-June

My spreader is not listed on the Bayer Advanced™ Season Long Grub Control label. What setting should I use?

Unfortunately, we cannot capture settings for every current or past spreader ever made. However, the most important thing is to apply the proper amount of product over your measured target area. If your spreader is not on our label, we recommend that you measure the recommended amount of product into your spreader, select a low setting, and apply evenly over the measured area until the spreader is empty. You may need to go over the area more than once; however, using a low setting will ensure that you won't run out of product before you've covered the area.

Will rain affect the performance of Bayer Advanced™ Season Long Grub Control?

Following the application of Bayer Advanced Season Long Grub Control, the treated area should be watered thoroughly to ensure the insecticide is brought down to the root zone where grubs are feeding. Consequently, rainfall should not affect the performance of the product.

What insect pests will Bayer Advanced™ Season Long Grub Control control?

When applied according to label instruction, Bayer Advanced Season Long Grub Control will control a number of insects. Please refer to the product label for more information.

How often do I need to apply Bayer Advanced™ Season Long Grub Control?

Bayer Advanced™ Season Long Grub Control should only be applied once per season at the labeled time and rate. This will provide season long protection from grubs and the damage they cause to your lawn.
